

Adaptive Trade Leadership IN A GLOBALISED WORLD

Equipping international business leaders with the technical trade knowledge and advanced complex and adaptive thinking capabilities needed to succeed in today's global business environment

A GROUND-BREAKING INTERNATIONAL COLLABORATION TO DEVELOP STRATEGIC TRADE EXPERTISE AND ADAPTIVE LEADERSHIP CAPACITIES IN TODAY'S LEADERS

Program Overview

Adaptive Leadership in a Globalised World provides international business leaders and trade policy experts with the technical knowledge and advanced complex and adaptive thinking capabilities required to succeed in today's global business environment.

This eight month program includes intensive on-site learning in Washington, Sydney and London

This trade leadership program is held over an eight-month period to provide leaders with the opportunity to instil and apply the lessons learned to their organisational context. During this time participants will engage in deep experiential learning and remain closely connected to the program through a combination of:

- On-site intensive learning led by renowned educators in Australia, the United States and the United Kingdom
- Interactive online conferences
- Purposeful interactions with peers outside the classroom
- Discussions and networking opportunities with leading experts from government and the private sector across the globe
- Site visits to organisations and government departments with practical experience 'on the ground'

- Simulated global business cases
- Mentoring

Participants also undertake individual and group assignments designed to broaden their understanding of the concepts introduced throughout the program and provide opportunities to apply their learning in a real world context.

Why is Adaptive Leadership in a Globalised Context so valuable?

One word defines the rapidly evolving international trade landscape: complexity.

Today's business leaders confront a host of political, economic, policy, regulatory and institutional barriers.

On the international political front the headlines are full of 'trade wars' news. The rise of populist sentiment in the developed world is challenging many of the postcold war assumptions, wherein the march of trade liberalisation and liberal political systems were in lock-step. The resurgence of state capitalism in China and other parts of the developing world fuels a broader anti-globalization backlash, placing global institutions, including the World Trade Organization, under great strain.

Political debates increasingly reflect these international tensions, as well as the broader, deteriorating, regional security environment. Security, trade and investment are now more, and increasingly, entwined, affecting trade policies and regulations across the globe. This general sense of gathering gloom is mirrored in financial markets, and aggravated by a generally deteriorating macroeconomic context, with talk of sustained deflation afflicting the developed world, slowing global economic growth and structural stagnation returning.

Yet threats bring new opportunities for exporters: New trade routes are being opened up through the proliferation of free trade agreements. Technological progress marches on, simultaneously rendering cross-border trade easier to do, while multiplying the possibilities for dispersing production facilities internationally and bringing goods and services closer to consumers.

In an age of tightly interconnected global supply chains and unprecedented global technological and trade disruption, it is critical that business leaders understand the impact of trade policies and develop the complex and adaptive capabilities required to think strategically and manage change effectively in volatile, uncertain, complex and ambiguous operating environments.

Adaptive Leadership in a Globalised Context canvasses the strategic issues confronting the global trading system, the tools states deploy in tandem with business and other actors to maximise national advantage in trade negotiations and policy design, and how these can be influenced and leveraged by businesses with greatest effectiveness. It provides the technical trade knowledge and adaptive leadership competencies required by today's international business leaders to effectively monitor and analyse trade policy, and prepare strategically for a range of future scenarios that will position their organisations for success in today's rapidly evolving international business landscape.

Key learnings

By the end of this twelve month program, you will:

- Engage in strategic leadership activities in the development and delivery of global trade activities
- Explain and critically assess the basic determinants and processes of trade, the role of global institutions in facilitating trade and the implications of various policy approaches on international trade
- Understand the organisational impact of proposed trade policy changes and develop informed responses
- Create strategic visions that resonate across cultural boundaries, and collaborate and unite people from different cultures in the pursuit of common goals
- Discover how to make better decisions in VUCA (Volatile, Uncertain, Complex and Ambiguous) operating environments
- Apply tools and techniques to take action and make progress on complex challenges
- Develop the capabilities and mindsets needed to lead effectively in a globalised business environment

- Understand how to grow your organisation's capacity to learn, evolve and adapt in a rapidly changing environment
- Understand the opportunities and challenges associated with Industry 4.0
- Understand the future of work and the impact on international human resource capital as part of strategic planning
- Develop policies to effectively mitigate cybersecurity and other corporate risks

Key capabilities for global business leaders

This unique experience will transform participants thinking and leadership effectiveness.

The program equips leaders with the key technical trade knowledge and adaptive leadership competencies needed to learn more, adapt faster and generate effective solutions in complex settings. These include:

- Mental agility
- Mindfulness
- The ability to test assumptions
- Understand purpose

Adaptive Trade Leadership

IN A GLOBALISED WORLD

- · Understand role of authority
- Identify adaptive challenges
- Perspective taking
- Subjectivity
- Awareness of automatic responses
- Work across factions
- Active collaboration

Facilitating a global perspective

The program's international aspect, and designed interaction with those in leadership roles within multinational organisations from across the globe is intended to instil and enhance the new perspectives needed to address increasingly complex issues, and to provide participants with the opportunity to grow their global business networks.

Research shows that 'study abroad' programs are usually defining moments in the lives of their participants. Most leaders who have studied abroad report that the experience increased their self-confidence, enabled them to better tolerate ambiguity and enhanced their ability to view the world and its issues from multiple perspectives.

Formal Certification

Participants will receive ISO/IEC 17024 certification as a global trade professional as well as qualify for participation in the Seven Summits Challenge (SSTC). The SSTC provides the ultimate career pathway for global trade and supply chain professionals to continue to grow through a combination of strategy, theory, technical trade skills and trade policy knowledge, ensuring that individuals and organisations are equipped to conduct profitable global trade as well as provide a pathway for trade policy experts to gain knowledge and skills to understand what it is like to be in the shoes of a global business.
